What do you give to the person who has everything? During the holiday season, finding a thoughtful, unique gift for those hardest to shop for is always a challenge. It's a challenge I never want to accept, but one that's ever-present in my gift-giving games. Especially when it comes to shopping for my husband.

I still remember the most outrageous gift I gave my husband: 11 years ago, I bought two concert tickets to a U2 concert (tickets that cost more than half of my monthly paycheck). But it was worth it to see the look on his face and the giddiness I felt gifting it.

So how can you get that holiday joy this season? Here are some of the most extravagant -- yet extra special -- items you can gift to those who have everything. After all, what is outrageous to some is out of this world to others!

This AI-powered indoor garden is one of the coolest gifts we've seen. It can grow up to 30 plants year-round -- and the best part is that your giftee doesn't have to have a green thumb to succeed! With a no-tools-required setup and minimal effort once assembled (all they'll have to do is add water and plant food to the tank each week), this gift is totally worth the splurge.

I used to think of kitchen gadgets as off-limits when it came to gifting. But not when the gadgets are chic, classy and unbelievably useful. Like the Beast Blender, which is top of my holiday list because of my newfound love of smoothie making. Coming in at $165, this blender is a beauty when sitting on the counter and a beast when blending. Or the Nama juicer ($550), a new hands-free juicer that allows you to put the entire recipe in the machine, turn it on, and walk away. I've never juiced, but if it's this easy, sign me up!

And you can never go wrong with new pots and pans, especially when it's for a self-proclaimed home cook. This is one of my go-to gifts for my dad (who never buys himself new cookware).

This year, I'll be looking into Caraway's ceramic coated cookware set, which comes with all the necessary items and a unique, easy to access storage system.

The Only Equipment The Workout Junkies On Your List Need To Succeed

I used to be a self-proclaimed gym rat. I had memberships at barre studios, yoga studios; you name it I did it. And I hated working out at home. But that all changed because of the pandemic a few years ago, and now I think the perfect holiday gift is a home gym upgrade.

Tonal

Top of my list (really my husband's list) is the Tonal, the smart weight training system revolutionizing how you work out at home. He's already rearranged our home gym to make room for the Tonal, so I can take a hint!
